

June's Museum Adventure

On a bright Saturday, June and Mom set out, To a Boston museum, without a doubt! The city sparkled, blue skies above.

Through big glass doors, June stepped inside, Her eyes grew wide and open wide! So many wonders to explore and see.

The dinosaur bones stood tall and grand, Like a castle made of bones in the sand. June roared a mighty roar-rawr!

In the ocean room, fish shimmered and shined, Colors and patterns beautifully combined. June waved at a turtle swimming by.

The butterfly garden was quiet and bright, Wings fluttered softly in dappled light. A butterfly landed on June's nose!

June built a tower with blocks so high, Reaching like buildings that touch the sky. Mom cheered, "You're an architect today!"

In the planetarium, stars twinkled far, Whispers of stories from every star. June imagined flying up to the moon.

She painted a picture at the art table, Mixing up colors—she felt so able!
Her masterpiece was a rainbow bright.

At the end of the day, June hugged her mom tight, Museum memories sparkling in twilight. "Can we come back?" June asked with glee.

As the city lights twinkled in the night, June dreamed of adventure, her heart so light. Tomorrow held wonders waiting to be found!
